We all know that without a system as firm as 911 the world would literally be unbearable. Research shows that when designing the emergency response system, the first thing that proposed a question was, "What numbers to use"? A group of people known as the Task Force convened and decided that the first digit would not be one or zero. They agreed upon the number nine. Thus 911 were born.

There is no question why such a small amount of digits would make up this emergency contact. It is easy enough for a young child to reach the authorities without having to remember a long complicated number. Without 911 an elderly person, animal, or small child, even you could be put in a fatal situation without the quick and easy response from a 911 call.

Yes, to be honest there are times they won't get there just in time, or respond fast enough. But just imagine life or what is left of life without the security and protection 911 provides the people. Most of us have known 911 all of our lives, to make it personal, and would not know what to do without it. Without 911 who would know to search for the missing woman, who would be the ones you call on when your house mysteriously caught on fire, there would only be me and you.

For me 911 bring security and it brings peace of mind, because I can sleep at night without thinking, "If something happened who would I run to or who would I call". What makes this system so much better is that it is linked to other people out there who can help you in most any situation. It is linked to the hospitals so you can get medical assistance quickly and it is linked to the fire department in a case such as a fire. So when you take a good look at 911 and ask yourself, "Would I feel safe without it" or would you rather have the option to call, I know I would chose to have 911 close at all times.

In conclusion 911 is the number that allot of us have on speed dial, it is the number you never forget, it's the number that I never want to be without. The phone lines are always open to anyone, no matter what race or religion, 911 doesn't discriminate. All we have to do is call and tell an operator the problem and help will come.
